

WRECK TIES UP WABASH SUB. SERVICE

All suburban and freight traffic on the Wabash railroad was suspended Tuesday as a result of both main line tracks being out of commission due to the wreck of a coal train north of Palos Park at the same spot where a fruit and vegetable train was derailed a week ago when an arch bar broke.

The coal train of 52 cars passed thru Orland Park at 4:00 o'clock Tuesday morning at about 50 miles per hour. The train was running on short time. A few minutes later, one of the coal cars became derailed, supposedly due to a broken arch bar.

Six cars were strewn over both tracks and about 600 feet of rails and ties were torn up. In all 24 cars were derailed.

Wrecking crews from Chicago and Decatur worked all day and late into the night before train service could be restored.

Thru trains were routed over the C. and E. I. railroad to Decatur. Orland was without mail and suburban service all day. The Orland commuters had to drive to Blue Island and take a Rock Island train to Chicago.

The Wabash depot at Orland Park was filled with cream cans and other express, destined for Chicago.

The suburban train which is made up at Orland was idle all day Tuesday. Fortunate no one was hurt.

BURGLAR HELD BY WM. FUNK AT TINLEY

When Wm. Funk, well known Tinley Park undertaker, came home from the basketball game at the Tinley Park school Tuesday evening, he had a real surprise awaiting him.

Mrs. Funk being in Chicago, only the pet family dog was at home. When Mr. Funk opened the door he heard the dog barking in another part of the house, and when he tried to snap on the electric light, it failed to work. Mr. Funk opened the kitchen door and the dog ran out and headed for the living room. Mr. Funk followed and from the dim hall light he saw a man standing in the room. Suddenly the man stepped in front of Mr. Funk, who then recognized the man and finally let him go.

Upon investigation it was found entrance had been gained thru a window and all the electric light bulbs had been unscrewed with the exception of the hall light.

DONATOR OF S. W. CENTER SITE, PASSES ON

One of the Southwest towns most widely known figures died this week, the result of a paralytic stroke suffered early Saturday evening.

He was Ernest G. Warner, 75-year-old Naturalist and doner of eighty acres of land to the Community Center Foundation of Palos Park, a non-denominational inter-community project of which he was a co-founder.

Funeral services for the well known pioneer settler, who died Sunday, were held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at Fellowship House, 131st street and the Southwest highway. Burial was in historic Palos Oak Hill cemetery, wherein are buried his father and mother and a brother and sister.

Although the day was extremely cold, a considerable number of people attended the rites. The Rev. Paul T. Sanders, resident director of the Foundation and together with Mr. Warner, a founder of the enterprise, had charge of the services. Others who spoke were the Rev. Guy Chester Jones, of the Worth Community church; Dr. Richard E. Shields, executive Secretary of the Community Church of America and an editor of a weekly periodical for that organization, and Glen Harding, prominent young people's leader of Chicago. A quartet composed of Clara Myrick, Evelyn Withners, Elizabeth Sanders and Lylis Kay rendered two vocal selections.

A true philosopher, if there ever was one, life came to Mr. Warner 75 years ago in a small log cabin near the site where the services were held. A bachelor, he lived alone in a brick farm house on the Foundation grounds. His farm was known the country over as a haven for birds and wild animals, and he fought hard to keep hunters from killing his "Woodland Pets", as he called them.

He lived very close to nature. Ralph Waldo Emerson was his philosophic guide, Henry David Thoreau his chief pattern for life.

Simplicity was the key-word of his life, and in accordance with his wishes, the services were conducted as such. For the last few years he had lived on an annual annuity from the Foundation, and left no estate of any kind.

He was the son of Peter and Julia Warner, outstanding pioneers, who settled in Palos in 1845. Mr. Warner is survived by a brother Phillip, who also resides in Palos Park.

Use of the $9,000,000 surplus which will have accumulated in the state treasury by April 1 as the result of governmental economies and the success of the retailers' occupation tax, to meet the demands of unemployment relief was advocated by Governor Horner in his message to the Illinois general assembly. The governor read the message in person, submitting with it to the legislature the reports of the various state departments and commissions, which told of the progress made by the state in the two years since he became governor.

In advocating the use of the $9,000,000 surplus the governor called upon the legislature to remain in session so that a bill appropriating it for relief purposes might be passed before January 15, the day on which the federal government will cease making appropriations for Illinois relief unless the state assumes its share of the burden. While asking for the immediate passage of the appropriation bill, the governor urged delay in passing other relief legislation.

The governor gave his approval to the principles of unemployment insurance and old age pensions, but said that legislation on these subjects must wait until President Roosevelt had submitted his promised plan to congress. He urged the legislature to extend the operation of the law which appropriated a portion of the motor fuel tax receipts for school purposes until July 1, and declared that meantime a commission should be appointed to investigate the condition of the state schools and to report upon the financial necessities.

The governor advocated legislation providing for the licensing of automobile drivers after examinations, regulations for motor bus and motor truck operation, with a view to producing revenue, and other legislation which would be conducive to safety on the highways.

STATE ITEMS

Mr. and Mrs. William B. Dawson of Ellsworth celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

Kenneth Hass, two, died in Millstadt of burns suffered when he fell into a bucket of hot water.

Mayor and Mrs. George W. Beck of Herrick, southeast of Pana, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Charles Abbott, for twelve years state's attorney of Kane county, died in Sherman hospital at Elgin following an operation.

William H. Denman, seventy years old, who registered at the Atlantic hotel in Chicago from Peoria, was found dead in his room.

Edgar C. Morrison, whose football teams at Bradford high school have won all their games since 1931, died at Lake View hospital in Danville following an attack of spinal meningitis.

By more than two to one, Waukegan voted to retain the aldermanic form of government instead of returning to the commission form, abandoned in 1931. The vote of 3,823 was less than one-third normal. Proponents of the proposition polled 1,163 votes, several less than the number of signers on the petition which authorized the referendum.

Farmers were warned by officials of the college of agriculture of the University of Illinois that chinch bugs threaten to be worse over most of Illinois this year than they were last year unless May and June are cold and wet enough to kill them off. The college authorities estimate that in 1934 chinch bugs caused a loss in this state of more than $31,000,000 to the corn crop alone.

Guerrilla warfare of the coal fields was blamed for dynamiting of a coal and gasoline laden freight train of the Chicago & Illinois Midland railroad near Cantrell. Twelve cars of the train plunged into a deep ravine when a vandal wrecked a concrete bridge over the gorge as the train passed over it. Investigation disclosed 300 feet of wire leading from the bridge to a spot where the dynamite evidently hid.

Governor Horner announced the appointment of three coal operators, three miners and three Illinois citizens not connected with the mining industry to make up the state mining investigation commission. The group will study methods and conditions of the mining industry with special reference to the safety of lives and the conservation of Illinois coal deposits. The members are: H. V. Bowman, Danville; August A. Wille, Murphysboro, and J. E. Poling, Chicago, to represent the public; George C. McFadden, Park Ridge; John E. Jones, Benton, and James F. McElwee, Sr., Peoria, to represent the coal operators; and Curtis Mundell, West Frankfort; Henry Vaughn, Harrisburg, and Thomas Gaffigan, Springfield, to represent the miners.

James A. Biddle, thirty-three, Chicago, was killed in a fall while wrecking a water tower at Mortimer station, near Paris. Tom White, twenty-four, Muncie, who was injured in a hospital. The bottom of the tank gave way, the men dropping 30 feet.

Governor Horner appointed George Knox, Hillsboro miner, to membership on the state mining board of the department of mines and minerals. Mr. Knox succeeds Elmer Weidler of Mt. Olive, a member of the board since last February, who resigned after being elected Macoupin county treasurer in November.

Veteran Dredge Is Busy on Another Big Job

WHEN throngs gathered at Pot Holes, near Yuma, Calif., to celebrate the starting of the All-American canal they watched with interest the operation of the walking bridge dredge shown in the illustration as it shoveled up ten cubic yards of earth at each swoop. The dredge is a veteran on big projects, having been used first on the Panama canal and later in Mississippi flood control work.

PETER FINDS ANOTHER FRIEND

"DID you and your relatives come down from the Far North alone?" asked Peter of Doty the Tree Sparrow.

"No," was Doty's prompt reply. "Slaty the Junco and his relatives came along with us so that we had a very merry party."

Peter pricked up his ears. "Is Slaty here now?" he asked eagerly.

"Very much here," replied a voice right behind Peter's back. It was so unexpected that it made Peter jump. He turned to find Slaty himself chuckling as he picked up seeds. He was very nearly the same size as Doty but trimmer looking. There was no mistaking Slaty the Junco for any other bird. His head, throat, and breast were a clear slate color. Underneath he was white. His sides were grayish. His outer tail feathers were white. His bill was flesh color; it looked almost white.

"Are you here to stay all winter?" cried Peter.

"I certainly am," was Slaty's prompt response. "It will take pretty bad weather to drive me away from here. If the snow gets too deep I'll just go up to Farmer Brown's barnyard. I can always pick up a meal there, for Farmer Brown's Boy is a very good friend of mine. I know he won't let me starve, no matter what the weather is. I think

Around the Dining Room Table

By ANNE CAMPBELL

AROUND the dining room table, A brown head and a fair Are bending above their schoolbooks, And doing a lesson there.

And I remember another Round table long ago, With a china lamp in the center And two dark heads bending low.

We helped ourselves to the apples That lay on the copper plate, And we munched on a bowl of popcorn While we learned to conjugate.

The old clock ticked on the mantle, A kitten lay on the rug, The stove burned wood in the corner, And the room was warm and snug.

When the clock struck nine, our mother Smiled in her wise sweet way, And we climbed to the attic bedroom To dream of another day.

The crocheted spread and the bureau, The pictures in rosewood frames, The books about Elsie Dinsmore, The lamps' uncertain flames; it is going to snow. You know I am sometimes called the Snowbird." Peter nodded. "So I have heard," said he.

"By the way, Slaty, what do you make your nest of and where do you put it?" asked Peter.

"My nest is usually made of grass and moss and rootlets," replied Slaty. "Sometimes it is lined with fine grass. When I am especially lucky I line it with long hairs. Often I put my nest on the ground and never very far above it. I am like my friend Doty the Tree Sparrow in this respect. It always seems to me easier to hide a nest on the ground than anywhere else. There is nothing like having a nest well hidden. It takes sharp eyes to find my nest, I can tell you that, Peter Rabbit."

Just then Doty, who had been picking seeds out of the top of a weed, gave a cry of alarm and instantly there was a flit of many wings as the little feathered folk sought the shelter of the bushes along the edge of the field. Peter sat up very straight and looked this way and looked that way. Crouching flat among the weeds he saw Black Pussy the Cat. Peter stamped angrily, then with jumps he started for the dear Old Brier Patch, lipperty-lipperty-lip.

A WOMAN'S EYESby

WHEN WE WAKE UP

LONDON neurologists recently carried on an interesting experiment with three soldiers of the British army. They tested the soldiers as to the effect of their mental attitude on their physical strength. This was measured by a device which the men gripped with all their might, registering as they gripped.

It was found that in their normal state the men had an average grip of a hundred and one pounds. Then, hypnotized and told they were weak, their greatest effort registered only twenty-nine pounds. Still hypnotized and told they were very strong, their strength returned to the normal hundred and one pounds and then jumped to a hundred and forty-one!

So, the men were weaker, in the relation of twenty-nine to a hundred and one, when they BELIEVED they were weak, but BELIEVED they were strong, they actually registered strength of a hundred and forty-one against a normal best of a hundred and one!

Sure enough people are constantly hypnotizing themselves into one thing or another. Some allow a few disappointments or defeats to hypnotize them into accepted failure. Of most of these it is true that if they believed better of themselves they could do better. It is also true, as enthusiastic "encouragers" point out to us, that most of the unusual achievements in the world went hand in hand with the supreme confidence—which is self-hypnotism—which convinced some men and women they could not fail.

However, kill-joy though it brands me, it must be pointed out that self-hypnotism can be a two edged sword. How about the man who would have made a perfectly good carpenter who hypnotized himself into confidence that he was cut out for the law—and lived the life of the "also ran" and the failure? How about the farm lad who found self-expression and joy in making things grow out of the earth, but who hypnotized himself, or allowed a

QUESTION BOX
By ED WYNN...
The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My brother is in the regular army and I have decided to enlist in the army also, but do not know what to do. You see the only condition under which I will join the army is that I must be near my brother. How shall I go about joining the army and being close to my brother? He is in the Seventy-fourth regiment.

Truly yours,

D. ZERTER.

Answer: Yours is a difficult problem, but I will help you: First, write to the United States government and tell them you wish to enlist in the army and, as you want to be near your brother, who's in the Seventy-fourth regiment, you wish to be put in the Seventy-fifth.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

There is a man living across the street from me who is acting queerly. The first day I saw him he was running around his back yard drinking from a medicine bottle. The second day I watched him he was still running and still drinking from this medicine bottle. Now, the third day I looked over I saw him skipping around the yard and still drinking from the same medicine bottle. Can you account for these strange actions?

Yours truly,

V. GATES.

Answer: The man you refer to is evdently a very sick man and his doctor must have told him to take his medicine two days running and then skip a day.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Can you tell me why it is that Scotland is always full of Americans in the summer?

Sincerely,
C. SICK.

Answer: That merely demonstrates the gratefulness of the American people. The reason Scotland is full of Americans in summer is simply to pay them back for the Americans being full of Scotch in the winter.

UNIQUE GRIDIRON SQUAD

Football in Denmark made history when a German team composed entirely of brothers met a Danish eleven near Copenhagen. The brothers are named Muntze and they hailed from Braunschweig. They walked onto the field led by their father who, himself an enthusiastic footballer, initiated his sons into the game as soon as each could toddle. It was the first time the team had left their own country, though they had traveled much in Germany; and both father and mother Muntze accompanied the boys. Many at the game found the critical anxiety and swelling pride of father Muntze and the wistful absorption of mother Muntze at least as pleasant and diverting to watch as the game itself. They were genuinely sorry when the gallant eleven, in spite of excellent team work, was beaten 7 to 2.

"Another girl friend! Listen, you're the original great lover, aren't you?" She was mad to taunt him. Couldn't she see that he was working toward frenzy? Prudence looked at the bolts on the door behind her. Suppose Calloway turned the tables and kept Milly and herself prisoners here? That was a thought. It sent icy prickles soloing up her spine.

"Let me go, Len! Make it snappy!" Milly's voice was strained.

"And suppose I don't?"

"You will. You are such a just man," Prudence, emerging from her hiding place, reminded sweetly.

Calloway wheeled and scowled at her backed against the double door. Milly shrugged, pulled a vanity case from her pocket and applied a lipstick.

"Took you a long time to put on your act, didn't it. I saw you stealing away from the red brick house. I went there to ask if I might see the rooms; I lived there once. You sneaked across the road. I knew—I knew Roddy liked you. So I followed to see what you were up to. Don't kid yourself. I found out. You came to meet that rotten Walt Gerard!"

Had the roof collapsed on her? She, Prudence Schuyler, was being accused of a rendezvous with that sneaky man!

"Don't be foolish!" She tried to keep her voice condescendingly amused; she succeeded only in producing words which shook with anger. "If you are interested to know, I came because Calloway and Walter Gerard are conspiring to hurt Rodney."

Milly caught the arm of the man who stood scowling from one girl to the other.

"Have you hurt Roddy, Len? If you have—"

Her small pointed white teeth set in her under lip like those of an angry cat.

The veins in Calloway's temples stood out like cords. "Didn't I tell you when you threw me down for him, Milly, that I would run Rodney Gerard off the earth? Well, I'm doing it, off this part of the earth. He'll think twice before he cuts in on my girl or my business again."

Milly shook him. "You great sap! You—you flat tire!" Her voice rose in shrill invective. "Rodney Gerard had nothing to do with my throwing you over. It was Walt! Your present pal! Walt!"

"Walt! Don't try to be funny. Did Walt have your picture with 'From Calico and Calloway to Liberty and love,' written on the back of it? Did he keep it in the room Rod uses for his office at High Ledges? 'Walt! Try another alibi, Milly, try another.' She shook him again with as much effect as a mouse attempting to pull down a stone lion.

"Have you gone haywire? I never sent a photo to Roddy—the one you saw belonged to Walt. I suppose he could use a desk at High Ledges, couldn't he? You make me sick with your suspicions of Roddy. What have you two—racketeers done to him?"

Calloway's face was as colorless as white chalk. "Say that again about Walt Gerard having that picture, Milly."

"I'll say it again. Shall I tell all? It isn't a bedtime story. It might have been more snappy if it hadn't been for Rodney Gerard. I was dead sick of working and one-night stands and shabby clothes and Grandpop sick and out of a job most of the time. Walt came along and offered to make life's walk easy—for a consideration. And can he hand out a line, I'm telling you!" Her eyes and voice tormented. "Before I closed with his offer, Rodney found it out and—he made it easy for no consideration. Get that, Len?"

"Is that right?"

"Sure, a hundred per cent right. I'm telling the truth. Rodney Gerard doesn't know I'm on earth—except when it's time to send me a check or bring me one. I've kept on taking the money so I would see him sometimes."

He glared at her unseeing. "So I've been hunting the wrong man. Have I? Walt was back of your break with me! Rod Gerard has been shielding his no-account brother. And I thought I was such a just man! I—"

His face worked horribly. Prudence felt as if a stripped soul had been laid bare.

A wall like the warning of a giant banshee swelled to a deafening screech, dwindled, rose again to ear-splitting proportions, died down.

"What's that?"

"Shut up, Milly! Listen! Count!" Calloway's voice was hoarse.

Prudence clenched her hands. The fire siren! Suppose it were the red brick house. Would Macky think to rescue the Paul Lamerie kettle?

Calloway pulled Milly away from the door. She gripped his arm.

"What is it, Len?"

"Fire! Gerard place! I—I—did it! I didn't mean that—I only wanted to keep the men from work!"

He jammed back the bolt and plunged into the snow. Prudence dashed after him. The fire must be near. The cattle barn! Walter Gerard and Calloway! "The cart's backed up." Had that "cart" been loaded with explosives?

The headlights of a car flashed. Calloway's! A tail-light swept away like a meteor pursued by furies. Prudence stumbled and slid and ran along the road made smooth and treacherous by the passing of many trucks. She couldn't go back for her skis.

"Wait! Wait! What's burning?" Milly Gooch shrieked.

Prudence stopped long enough to call over her shoulder:

"The barn—where—the crew—is living—I think!"

Shouts ahead. Crashes. Timbers falling? A curious sky. Red. Sullen. Shot with flame. The light had put out the stars. She coughed and tried to get her breath. Ahead the cattle barn loomed darkly against the sinister glow. Black figures like huge panicky ants dashed in and out of the glow. Men were dragging a hose from the fire engine to the pond. Someone shouted:

"Soak those pines! If the woods start to burn—"

That was the reason of the frightful tension. Even with snow on the ground the whole forest might go up like tinder.

Runabouts, gigs, automobiles of all descriptions crowded the spaces under the trees. Men worked, ran, hauled. No mistaking Calloway's massive figure. Reckless of self and safety he fought the blaze. There was David steadying a groaning man. He was safe, thank God!

Clang! Clang! Clang! The emergency gong of an ambulance! It must have come from the hospital in the next town.

Tree by tree Prudence crept forward. The heat was scorching. Not hotter for her than for those men working near that red inferno. She put her arm across her face to protect it from sparks and hot cinders.

Rodney in that inferno. Prudence shut her eyes tight to get her grip. Then she looked. The cry of horror she swallowed nauseated her. "Don't dare go back on me!" she threatened her dizzy brain.

Milly Gooch here! How had she come? Milly, her short black hair blowing in the breeze which was fanning the fire, was clinging to Rodney's sleeve. He was trying to shake her off. He had succeeded. Why, why did he go toward that burning shell again? Jim was pulling him back. He couldn't stop the fire. He—

Roars of warning. A crash? The roof! A red-hot girder shot into the air. A woman screamed. It spiraled down! Down where Rodney Gerard and Jim were standing!

Terror paralyzed Prudence. Rodney hurt? She couldn't bear it! Hurt before she could tell him she was sorry. Men were crowding round something. What? Why was she standing here when—

She ran forward and caromed into someone running, with a force which swept her from her feet. An arm caught her.

"Prue! Prue! You shouldn't be here!"

She brushed her hand across dazed eyes. Was this really Jim Armstrong? He was safe! Was Rodney lying there hurt—perhaps?

"Is it really—you? I saw you and Rodney—I thought the girder hit—" She seized the lapels of his coat to steady herself. "Is—is—he—"

Armstrong gently but firmly loosened her tense fingers. His lips were white as he assured with exaggerated cheeriness:

"Rod is safe, Prue. Listen! Don't stare like that! He's all right. It's Calloway who is hurt. He rushed in and took the girder which would have wiped Rod out."

She felt herself going, flung an arm around Jim's neck. She must hold tight to something. Was that Rodney looking at her from behind Jim? His eyes were terrible. Curious, the world was so black, the sky was—so red—

When she came out of the smothering gloom, she was sitting on a coat against a tree. Who was shrieking and sobbing? It couldn't be herself having hysterics, could it? She would die of shame if it were. David was rubbing her hands. A man in a white jacket was holding something to her mouth. Jim Armstrong was looking down at her. How queer his eyes were! Where was Rodney Gerard?

She said unsteadily:

"Don't tell me I—fainted when I might have been—of use."

The ambulance surgeon's grin slashed her sooty face. "Use! You did your good deed for the day, all right. For the love of Mike, why doesn't someone stop that circus rider's yelling! I guess if anyone was entitled to pass out cold you were. Drink this like a good girl."

CHAPTER XII

Bent over her work bench, the sleeves of her green linen smock rolled above her elbows, Prudence was intent on soldering the last link in the collar for Jean's kitten.

Finished. And a piece of work which made her artistic self purr when she looked at it. This was the last piece of Christmas work. Tomorrow would be Christmas.

Christmas! Two weeks since the fire! She had not seen Rodney Gerard. Every moment she could spare from work outside had been spent at her bench, and he had not come to the red brick house. David rarely mentioned him. Why should he come? What modern man would be interested in a girl who "passed out cold" in an emergency?

Her face burned. Why, why had she collapsed—for the second time in her life—like a mid-Victorian heroine in a crisis, when she might have gone on helping! Even the fact that she had forgotten to eat before she started on her man hunt, that her heart had stopped when the girder fell, as she supposed on Rodney, was no excuse.

She extinguished the lamp under the crucible and glanced at the bay window. Time enough to set the stones before she dressed for the party.

The party! She opened a white packet and poked the cat's eyes on the tissue paper into the order in which she would use them. How they glowed! They were like eyes. Inscrutable eyes. Like Rodney's the night they had met hers over Jim Armstrong's shoulder. What had he thought when he saw her clinging to his friend? Only one thing he could think after she had told him that she was engaged to Jim. She had lied to set an insurmountable wall between them, and then she had found that no barrier was needed because, rich or poor, she knew that she loved him, that he would be true and fine all his life. She hadn't been sure of it, though, until Milly Gooch had flung the truth at Calloway that night in the smithy. She had wanted love without risk of heartbreak; it looked as if she would get heartbreak without love.

The morning after the cattle barn had burned to the ground, every able-bodied man in the village had dropped his own work to help rebuild. Each man of the scorched, chastened crew, who had been able to use his hands, had tried to do the work of three in the woods. They had been billeted in barns. They ought to work their arms off—hadn't their rioting caused the damage? That wasn't quite fair; the truck which Len Calloway and Walter Gerard had dumped at their door had been the real cause.

The new building had gone up as quickly as if a Radio City engineer had waved a magic wand. In appreciation of the neighborly spirit, Rodney Gerard was giving, a Christmas eve party to the townspeople. Milly Gooch would not be among those present. She had left the Puffers' the day after the fire.

Although David spent most of each day where the crew was working, he never mentioned Rodney Gerard. They were shutting her out. She would have loved to help in the preparations—she adored getting ready for parties—but:

"I couldn't crash in and offer my invaluable assistance, could I?" she interrogated the emery wheel, but the wheel merely threw off a spiteful little shower of pumice in answer.

Her thoughts kept pace with her foot on the treadle. Would Rodney Gerard come for the collar? Perhaps he had forgotten it. What would she do with it? She would hate like the dickens to remind him. It had proved expensive. If they were friends as they had been that day he had ordered it—

Why live over that? It only made her heart ache as if something were squeezing it unbearably. Why had she been so obsessed with the idea that a man of wealth couldn't remain true to the marriage covenant? The fact that her brother's wife and her sister's husband had been philanderers was no excuse for misjudging Rodney.

"You shouldn't be working without a light, Miss Prue."

Prudence looked up with a start. "When did you steal in, Macky?"

"I didn't steal in. I don't like that word steal, Miss Prue." The shade of the lamp rattled as Jane Mack removed it.

"My mistake. Bring the light to the bench, will you?" She held up the collar.

"This is the best thing I've done yet. It's a triumph. I'm not pleased with myself, am I? It is a collar for Jean's kitten. See the little Micky Mouses?"

Jane Mack sniffed. "You do so much for other people, Miss Prue, it's a shame you should have—have lost that emerald and the diamonds."

"Forget it. This is Christmas. I have a feeling that those stones will come back some day. I suspect—"

"Who, Miss Prue?"

"Macky! Has the mere memory of that hold-up man turned you white? Hurry up and make us both a cup of tea. Everything ready for dinner tomorrow!"

"Yes, Miss Prue. I've had my tea. Saw a procession in the cup. Can't tell whether it's going to be a wedding or a party or a funeral."

Hours later, Prudence, squeezed into the back seat beside Mrs. Si in the Puffer car, looked up at High Ledges.

"This is the party in your cup, Macky," she said gaily.

The windows were alight with candles. Evergreens gay with colored bulbs bordered the drive. An all-white Christmas tree, dripping with silver tinsel, glittering with artificial snow, glimmering with white bulbs, loomed on the lawn in a flood of light. The atmosphere throbbed with gayety and good cheer and Christmas spirit.

Prudence regarded herself in the long mirror in the dressing room. For the first time since she had left the city and festivities behind her, she was wearing an evening gown. The color was Christmas. Should she have worn a frock so blackless to a party like this? Why not? It was her best, and the best was none too good for this festivity.

Her brother joined her in the hall. "I've been looking for you, Prue. Sorry not to wait and come with you, but Gerard wanted me here early."

"He's always wanting you, David. I don't know where we would have tucked you into the Puffer car had you waited. Isn't that music heavenly! I've never seen a more glorious Christmas tree! Looking pretty snappy, aren't you?" she approved gaily, to camouflage the surge of thanksgiving which shook her as she looked at him, apparently so strong, so well. "You are not terribly hard to look at yourself. Miss Mack is doing her bit for the honor of the family. She is stiff with black glitter, and she is smiling. Shall we go down?"

From the stairs Prudence saw Jean and Rodney Gerard greeting the arriving guests. Rodney looked up. The color mounted to his forehead as his eyes met Prue's. Her heart grew wings. He must have forgiven her, he must want to be friends again, or he wouldn't look at her like that. He crossed the hall and met her as she reached the lowest step.

"K. K. and I began to think you had passed up our party." He dropped the hand he had seized. "Help make people feel at home, will you?" he asked stiffly. "You'll find Jim in the next room," he flung over his shoulder as he turned away.

His voice had the effect of a shower of ice water. Anger burned away the chill. Was he afraid that she might expect him to devote himself to her if he showed even decent civility? He needn't worry. With chin up she entered the room in which dancers were swinging and humming to the rhythm of the music.

"Come out to the sun porch, Prue. I want to talk to you."

The grimness of Armstrong's voice generated prickles in her veins. Had he found out what she had told Rodney? Was he furiously angry? Perhaps he would sue her for saying that she was engaged to him. That was a cheerful thought for this merry Christmas.

Hiking 150 Years Old

Hiking is not modern, according to information revealed in London. It was called "pedestrianism" over a century ago, but the pastime was the same, according to a description in the Sporting Magazine, published in 1792. The opening paragraph of the article on pedestrianism declares that it is "an exercise which . . . has lately risen into much notice." It relates that Foster Powell, of Leeds, for a hundred-guinea wager, walked from London to York and back in five days, in the middle of November. He afterward accomplished several similar feats, and in his fifty-seventh year was still taking on bets. In 1765, according to the magazine, "a young woman went from Blenclog in Scotland to within two miles of Newcastle in one day, which is about 72 miles."

PETER'S DENIAL

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:27-31, 54, 66-72.

GOLDEN TEXT—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. I Corinthians 10:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Peter Did Wrong and Was Sorry.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When Peter Failed. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Be Prepared to Meet Temptation. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Jesus Is Denied Today.

A better statement of the subject would be "Peter's Downfall." From the height of fellowship with God which Peter enjoyed when he confessed that Jesus was the Messiah, in Matthew 16, to the depth of emphasizing a lie by means of foul oaths is a long way, but the steps were quickly taken, for the time was short. The presentation of this lesson should be done in such a way as to be a solemn warning to Christians today. In order that we may be saved from such a fall, let us study carefully the steps in Peter's backsliding.

I. Over-weening Self-confidence (vv. 29-31).

Jesus had issued a solemn warning, even a prophecy, of the backsliding of all the disciples. Peter's unwillingness to face the cross alienated him from Jesus, and when apprised of the fact that the disciples would all forsake Jesus, Peter declared that Jesus was mistaken, saying, "Although all shall be offended, yet will not I." Our condition is most perilous when we are most sure of our safety.

II. Sleeping at the Post of Duty (vv. 32-37).

Peter and two others were privileged to be near to Jesus in the hour of his anguish. The favored three were commanded to watch, but in one short hour the very one who was so confident of his self-sufficiency had fallen asleep instead of watching. The only way to escape from backsliding is to watch. The one who overrates himself under-rates the power of the devil.

III. Neglect of Prayer (vv. 38).

The legitimate inference from the Lord's words, "Watch and pray," is that he had commanded them to pray as well as to watch. The reason there is so little prayer on the part of Christians is due to the fact that there is a lack of the sense of need of God's help.

IV. Service in the Energy of the Flesh (v. 47).

When they came to arrest Jesus, Peter took a sword and cut off an ear of the servant of the high priest (John 18:10). He was zealous for the Lord, but it was zeal without knowledge. Even in his outward zeal for his Lord he made a bungling job. If he had been in downright earnest he would have cut off the man's head instead of his ear. This is characteristic of much of the service rendered today by Christians.

V. Following Jesus Afar Off (v. 54).

Christ's rebuke for taking the sword and the awkward position in which Peter's act had placed him caused him to follow Jesus afar off. This rebuke widened the breach between Peter and his Lord. Following Jesus afar off got him into further trouble.

VI. Seeking Comfort Among the Lord's Enemies (v. 67).

This fire was built by those who had come unsympathetically to witness the crucifixion and even to mock in this tragic hour. For Christ's disciples to warm themselves at the enemies' fire, to get comfort from the things prepared for the satisfaction of his enemies is sinful. Peter not only tried to get comfort by using that which the enemy had prepared for themselves, but he engaged in conversation with the enemy and they that stood by declared that his speech betrayed him. Multitudes of professing Christians have grown cold while sitting around the enemies' fire. It would be infinitely better to freeze to death in Gethsemane than to keep warm around the enemies' fire.

VII. Open Denial (vv. 68-72).

Step by step Peter went downward until the words of a servant girl provoked open and blasphemous denial. Peter's trouble began when he shrank from the cross. It was that shrinking which separates him from contact with his Lord. Only the one who has been in touch with the Lord can backslide. Many of the so-called backsliders have never been born again; they have simply returned to their own way.

"COLONIAL GIRLS" FEATURE OF THIS APPLIQUED QUILT

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Here is a good idea for needleworkers who like to do applique work. A quilt made of a group of six different Colonial ladies dressed in beautiful colorful prints and each in a different position. The patches are stamped with lines for cutting. The eighteen inch block is stamped with lines for applique work and outline embroidery stitch.

Six of these eighteen inch blocks are used for a single bed quilt, and twelve blocks for double bed quilt.

If you will send 15c to our quilt department we will mail one complete stamped eighteen-inch block with material of the block pictured above, also a picture of a quilt showing the six different girls in this set.

A set of six blocks with applique material will be sent for 75c. A set of twelve blocks for $1.50. The beauty of this can really only be appreciated after you see a block worked in beautiful colors.

Skunk Given Rating as

Friend of the Farmer

Investigation by the United States bureau of biological survey shows that the main diet of skunks consists of grasshoppers, crickets, beetles, mice, rats, ground squirrels, pocket gophers and sometimes stems of succulent plants. They are not averse to a ground bird if they can catch them, and now and then, they are caught raiding a farm chicken house. However, bureau of biological survey reports show that skunks rarely make these raids, preferring to do their hunting at distances from the haunts of men.

Although usually safe because of its protective "smell-gun," the skunk sometimes falls victim to wolves, coyotes, foxes, badgers, and great-horned owls.

The general color of the skunk is black with a thin white stripe between the eyes. This stripe forks at the shoulders and continues along the sides until it reaches the tail. The tail is furred with black hairs with white bases, and ends usually in a white tuft. There is much variation in width of these stripes, trappers preferring pelts with the narrower stripes.

Skunks vary in size, but usually weigh from five to ten pounds. Their black and white markings, size and bushy tails make skunks one of the easiest fur-bearing animals to recognize.

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615

CHALLENGES SPIRIT OF EVERY PATRIOT

With the abrogation of major disarmament treaties imminent and war clouds threatening many international horizons, The American Legion has launched a nation-wide campaign to obtain in 1935 the enactment of a sane and adequate national defense for the United States as the safest possible insurance for continued peace on this continent.
America has such a defense program on paper. The Legion's job is to take it from the realm of theory to the firm ground of an accomplished fact. Under the leadership of its chairman, Dr. Thomas H. Healy, of Georgetown University, the National Defense Committee is mobilizing its forces to do this in two major ways:

It will demonstrate to Congress the necessity of adopting legislation making effective an adequate national defense, providing for a standing Army of sufficient strength to repel invasion, immediate construction of a full-strength London Treaty Navy, and a strong air defense for our coasts and possessions.
It will press a sustained, intensive educational campaign to arouse the public consciousness to the imperative need for sane preparedness, not to foster war but to obtain every possible ounce of assurance that war will not be forced upon us by a foreign aggressor.

The accomplishment of this vital program will demand the active participation of every citizen, as well as every member of The American Legion and The American Legion Auxiliary. It is a "sleeves-up" job for every one who wants peace with honor.

Program Is Sound

The Legion's national defense program is sound, reasonable and practical, and in the light of present world conditions, meager enough. In its major points it differs little from the national defense program of other leading organizations, such as the United States Chamber of Commerce and the Daughters of the American Revolution. It is closely related also to the other major phases of the Legion's work, particularly Americanism. It is in line also with the Universal Service Act which the Legion is sponsoring, and which would in the event of war conscript capital, industry and manpower, thus discouraging war by taking all the profit out of it.

The Legion will lend hearty support to all sincere efforts to hasten the dawn of lasting world peace whenever the time arrives that other nations are ready to consider disarmament on a permanent basis. But as long as other nations remain armed, as long as they abrogate disarmament treaties, as long as they are committed to the spirit of conquest, just that long will the Legion demand that the United States be prepared to defend itself.

Rookie: "Let go, honey."

The Finest Washing In the Country

"Ask A Monarch Customer"

Hugh Ptolemy, Safety Supervisor of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, congratulates C. P. Koch on his eight-year record of no accidents of any kind among the employees of the maintenance department under his supervision. Mr. Ptolemy reports that the entire company comprising more than 3000 employees has had no fatal accidents during the last two years.

For the second successive year, employees of the Public Service Co., of Northern Illinois have had no fatal accidents, according to Hugh A. Ptolemy, Safety Supervisor of the Company. This record for safe work was made in spite of the fact that the Company has more than 3000 employees, many of whom are engaged in handling electrical equipment, climbing poles and other dangerous work safeguarding service day and night in good and bad weather.

The methods that permitted the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois to establish its safety record are equally effective in the cause of community and public safety, in the opinion of Mr. Ptolemy.

"It is our belief," he said, "that a job well done is a job safely done. To that end we devote much time and effort to develop employees skilled in their work and with the realization that safety is an important part of their jobs."

"We hold regular safety meetings and discuss proper ways of doing various kinds of work. We have a set of simple safety rules that must be followed on every job. Our employees are required to know first aid and we hold special classes for that purpose. This first aid training alone has meant that 36 more people are alive today, people whose lives were saved by employees trained in first aid."

"While modern equipment and protective devices have done much to decrease accidents, the human element is the most important and there is no substitute for safety training. Training means that people form the habit of doing things the safe way whether at work, in the home or at the wheel of an automobile."

HEAHN THEHAH..By NEMO
What is in the notes that Howard Jungles writes to Ada Semmler? It is rumored that Jeanette Cooper is Grace Warming's nearest rival!!! Frieda Hentsch has a great liking for that peppy little Arnold Bertelson. What do the initials E. F. mean to Edna Lorenz? Why does Dorothy Homering like her part in the Sophomore play so well? It might help to know that Robert Nieman plays the part of her husband! Elsworth McGovney is tickled pink at the part he has in the play! The reason for this is that he is courting Grace Moriarty—Abyssinia.

You're The Loser

WHEN you allow Headache, Neuralgia, Muscular, Rheumatic, Sciatic or Periodic Pains to keep you from work or pleasure. You can't go places and do things when you are suffering—and the work or good times won't wait for you.

Why allow Pain to rob you of Health, Friends, Happiness, Money?

DR. MILES' ANTI-PAIN PILLS have been used for the relief of pain for more than forty years. They taste good, act quickly, do not upset the stomach, nor cause constipation, leave no dull, depressed feeling.

Thousands have used them for twenty, thirty, forty years, and still find that nothing else relieves pain so promptly and effectively.

Why don't you try them? Once you know how pleasant they are to take, how quickly and effectively they relieve, you won't want to go back to disagreeable, slow acting medicines.

You too may find quick relief. Why wait forty minutes for relief when Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve you in ten to twenty minutes?

As a household remedy I have never found anything that equalled Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills.

I never found anything that was so good to stop pain as Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. I have told many about them and I find they are all using them.

I have been using Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for years. I keep them on hand all the time. I can certainly recommend them for pain.

VITAMIN D MILK IS SUNLIGHT SUBSTITUTE

WITH fall here and winter just around the corner, out of door sports are just about over for most people. To spend most of one's days in a home or an office is not, of course, as conducive to buoyant health as are those hours spent on the beach or the golf links in the summer. Because we use so much energy in keeping up our strength in the winter, it is usually advisable to supplement by artificial means the Vitamin D that we have gained from exposure to sunlight during the summer, because sunshine is Nature's great producer of Vitamin D.

To supply the demand for a substitute for direct sunlight, scientists have perfected Vitamin D milk, which is milk that has been subjected to ultraviolet rays until it is really "Sunshine Milk" or "bottled sunshine." In speaking of Vitamin D milk, Dr. McCollum of Johns Hopkins university says that fortified with Vitamin D, milk is more than ever the great protective food of the human race.

If your work keeps you indoors during the hours that the sun shines during the winter time, try this pleasant, easy, and economical way of getting your sunshine. You'll find that you are able to go through the winter season and into spring with the same vigor and energy that are yours during the summer months.

NO WONDER SMALL PERSON IS PROUD

PATTERN 9195

Little Miss Molly here can hardly wait to run outside to show her brother Tommy that even though she is "only a girl," she has pockets, too. And she thinks they're nicer than his—scalloped and buttoned the way they are, and plenty jaunty. She's also more than proud of the way she manages to dress herself in this pretty bloomer frock. Three front buttons to fasten—there, it's all done! And her mother likes those cunning puffed sleeves and the long inverted pleat, back and front. For those who prefer them, simple cap sleeves like those in the smaller

National Topics Interpreted

Washington. — Out of President Roosevelt's eight-billion-dollar budget is developing a very Budget Starts Controversy which runs to the heart of the New Deal. True, this controversy like nearly all of the others will not result in changing the President's plans, but it seems to me to be a matter which justifies consideration even though the Roosevelt will in the end must prevail.

Included in the budget was provision for an appropriation of four billion dollars and, as stated by the President, to be supplied "in one sum, subject to allocation by the Executive principally for giving work to those unemployed on the relief rolls." Beyond that, there was no exposition of its intended use nor has there been any detailed statement of the plan. As a result, there is a considerable body of opinion in the halls of congress which is saying in effect that Mr. Roosevelt ought to define his work relief program. He has not done so, and the best information I can obtain is that no explanation may be expected in the near future; he intends to proceed as he has in the past by developing a program piece-meal and using the funds as the occasion requires.

In the critical days of 1933 when Mr. Roosevelt took office, I believe it was generally conceded that the emergency was so serious as to warrant delegation by congress of almost any power even remotely desired by the President. He used that power during 1933 and 1934. Now, many members of the house and senate believe that the time has arrived for congress to become more inquisitive about the expenditure of taxpayers' money and to avoid following in blind trust however the President may direct. While it is probable that congress will not be told how the President intends to use the money and while it is also probable that the requested appropriation of four billion dollars will be rubber stamped, the fact remains that at no time during the New Deal has there been such a buzz of discontent in the President's own list of wheel-horses. Senator Byrnes, the South Carolina Democrat who has been looked upon consistently as Mr. Roosevelt's spokesman on financial affairs in the senate, has informed that body that it is impossible "to be more specific at this time" on the work relief program. Senator Byrnes will go no further. He has given no interviews respecting his own thoughts on the matter and apparently has elected to wait at bat until the President tosses him the ball. Nevertheless, there are some senators who think they detect just a trace of concern in the attitude of this administration spokesman and they are wondering how long he will continue to repress his known energies.

Presentation of the budget was expected in many quarters to disclose the means by which the President hoped to get employment going again in private industry. It showed nothing tangible in this direction. Consequently, critics of the administration who have had opportunity to speak in the house and senate have begun to chide the administration on its third experiment in three years. Representative Snell of New York, Republican leader in the house, has called attention to the situation something in this manner: The President tried out one plan in 1933; he tried out a second plan in 1934; and now he is trying a third experiment. The first two were found to be all wet, and the Republicans, it seems, are convinced that the current effort has two strikes on it before it gets started. They are predicting failure for it in every way except the success that is assured in getting rid of money which the treasury is borrowing. Their conversations all have the same theme song, namely that the country is seeing activity, but they are not predicting how long this action can continue until the nation goes broke.

Whether the business leaders who met at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., a month ago were right or wrong in proposing the use of a dole instead of the more expensive work relief plan, or whether they were correct in any of the other recommendations they made, the truth is the administration has rejected without comment every single one of the recommendations made by that group. Mr. Roosevelt made no mention in his budget message or in his annual message to congress of plans for balancing the budget, and this fact at last has sunk in. The result is additional fear on the part of many business leaders who can see in the future only inflation and economic chaos for the country.

Privately, I have heard many expressions indicating that men of wealth are putting their money into tangible property—something that will not dry up and blow away. That is always the refuge of individuals who fear that the currency which their government controls is losing its worth. These men will be criticized for that course, naturally enough, by blind followers of inflation plans.

From all of the signs now visible and from the undercurrent of numbing that I hear, it certainly is made to appear that Mr. Roosevelt is confronted with a necessity for some definite outline of his plans and an assurance that he will adhere to those plans. Without such, the situation assuredly is that he will not have the confidence of the business structure. It seems illogical even to suppose that he can gain the co-operation of business in expanding its activities, thereby re-employing workers, unless he takes a different tack than his pronouncements thus far indicate. At least, such is the conclusion of a vast number of thinking people.

I heard a visitor to Washington say the other day that he would like to ride airplanes, "but the confounded things fly most of their schedules at night."

Night Flying
The individual is a man of great wealth and his time is of great value. He insisted he was sincere in his statement that he would much rather save time by flying if the planes were on day-light schedule.

The statement aroused my curiosity to the extent that I conducted some inquiry into the situation. I found the night schedules of the air lines to be due to the fact that they are fixed by the Post Office department. If a line desires to carry mail it has to subject itself to the dictates of "Big Jim" Farley, the postmaster general. His office can and does say to an air line that it will fly a ship leaving New York at 9 p. m. or else it does not get the mail contract. The result is that the plane leaves New York at 9 p. m. or it leaves Chicago or Washington or any other city on a time stated by the Post Office department.

Many persons feel that such a policy is taking undue advantage of private industry. It is true that the Post Office department is paying for carrying the mails at a rate probably well above the rate it receives in postage on that mail. It is, therefore, a subsidy. But this government has for years maintained a policy of subsidizing new industries and that course is responsible for the success attained by the development of the transportation systems of this country.

The President's special commission named to study the airplane problems of this country and to make recommendations heard much testimony and received much data showing that the airplane industry in the United States had placed this country in the number one position in the air among all nations of the world. Individual members of that commission have stated they regard this as highly beneficial. Some of them at least maintain that development of an air industry was one of the greatest steps taken in national defense preparation. They appeared to consider this one end as justifying the course without even considering the maintenance of a great industry within the borders of our nation as a commercial unit.

But while this has been going on, and while many authorities on economic matters continue to urge development of the air industry, we find another agency within the government placing handicaps on that same segment of the economic structure. The least that can be said is that the courses cannot be reconciled.

The administration is determined to control oil production. If it cannot do so by Executive order—and the Supreme Court of the United States has decreed it cannot do so in that manner—there will be laws predicated upon the interstate commerce clauses of the Constitution which will permit the executive branch of the government to keep its hand on the valve of oil wells.

President Roosevelt apparently was not much concerned over the Supreme court decision which invalidated that part of the recovery act, giving the Chief Executive authority to allow or prohibit interstate movement of oil as it decided best. The President appeared to feel, in responding to questions by news correspondents, that the rebuff was only temporary. He announced at that time a determination to control oil production in one way or another to avoid what he describes as a criminal waste of a great natural resource.

The oil case, the Supreme court decided, had its origin in regulations and executive orders issued under what the administration believed to be authority accorded by the recovery act. Those regulations and orders prescribed quotas allowed to be shipped from each of the several oil producing states. The motivating spirit was a desire to avoid accumulation of a vast surplus of crude oil with the consequent depressing of prices until crude oil was worth little or nothing. But, like many other prohibitory laws and rules of conduct, individuals resented being told they could not do a certain thing and immediately began to devise ways by which it could be done—a characteristic that was developed to its fullest during the bootleg days of national prohibition. The oil that was moved surreptitiously came to be known as "hot oil," and the controversy over the validity of the regulations and executive orders consequently was called the "hot oil" case.

TRUE GHOST STORIES

By GUY KIBBEE Actor.

"ONE of the most gruesome experiences I ever had," related Guy Kibbee, motion-picture and stage star, "was when I was with the Alpine Stock company, then playing in Vermont."

"The leading lady, Evelyn Grey, then on her way to fame and success, was very ill. She had a very bad case of tuberculosis, yet was so ambitious and enjoyed her work so much that she would not stop long enough to get well. Many people in the theater are that way; they love their profession unto death."

"Every night, after the show, she would lie down in her dressing room for half an hour or so before going home. "On this particular occasion we were playing 'East Lynne,' in which she was taking the lead. In the last scene she wore a long white garment. After the show was over we all left for our hotels, except Evelyn, who stayed alone, as was her wish, for her rest."

"We all got up to the hotel, talked for an hour or more, then decided to play a bit of poker. The cards were back at the theater, and as actors made little or no money in those days, we went back after them instead of buying new ones."

"We entered the theater and saw a figure in white walking slowly down the aisle. We got a look at her face, and it looked like Evelyn, yet it was too pale and awful to be she. It was way past time for her to have left the theater. The apparition gave us the jitters, so we left without the cards. Evelyn never walked about the theater. It all seemed so unreal and ghostly that we went home and to bed. If the figure had been Evelyn, we felt sure she would have spoken to us."

"Next morning we were all ready for rehearsal at ten o'clock. Evelyn did not appear. Some one went back to look in her dressing room and found her. She had on the same white gown, and was lying on her couch in the dressing room dead. She had died during the night, alone."

By JANE COWL Actress.

"HEAVEN knows we mortals can't guess the elaborate workings of the subconscious mind, nor of mental telepathy nor of psychic forces!" exclaimed Jane Cowl, the brilliant actress. "Every now and then we see an obvious example of their powers, but most of the time we are in complete darkness about their intricacies."

"When I was a child, I was early impressed with an example of psychic warning," continued Miss Cowl, as she scanned the rows of books of mystery in the book store which she was visiting.

"One day, while my Grandmother Julia, my mother's mother, was ill, I visited her. She lay in her great carved walnut bed, an invalid, helpless, bedridden. For years she had not been able to move from that bed. Above her was a huge painting in a weighty carved frame, all part of the massive, ugly decorative scheme of the day."

"Suddenly, Grandmother Julia astonished us by jumping from her bed and rushing to the middle of the room. "We asked what was the trouble, the cause for her unexpected act. 'My sister called to me, my sister called me!' she exclaimed."

"Just then the weighty picture fell from the wall upon her bed, and its glass shattered into hundreds of pieces. "If grandmother had been in her bed the heavy thing would have doubtless killed her."

"It would seem that the spirit of her sister, who was in another city at the time, warned her of her danger, and sustained her with unexpected strength to jump from her bed. Perhaps not, but it is plausible the spirits of our friends and relatives can visit us in other forms than physical," concluded Miss Cowl, as she discovered a book on criminology which she wanted to read, and to which she turned her keen attention.

Odd Device Reproduces Music

"Music with the tonal quality of that produced by famous musicians can be played by any pianist on a homemade organ constructed from a dishwasher motor, an old keyboard, tin cans, a loud speaker and other 'gadgets.' The organ contains a photo-electric cell on which a beam of light shines through revolving disks. A film sound track of tones rephotographed on the disks is converted into sound when the beam reaches the photo-cell, reproducing the original tone of the virtuoso.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Plenty of Sand Hazards

"And no use has ever been found for the Sahara desert?" "No; but it is only a question of time when some enthusiast will come along and lay it out in golf links."

REAL WORTH IN "CHILD HOBBY"

Parents and Other Grown-Ups Can Benefit Thereby.

Children are running on the Hobby platform. In The Parents' Magazine Ernest Elmo Calkins urges grown-ups to pledge their support to a recreational program in which very young persons are the major interest, because, as the gentleman puts it:

"The biggest benefit new leisure can confer on you is the opportunity to become acquainted with your children—or, if you have none, with any children."

In the opinion of Mr. Calkins, who has had sixty-seven years in which to garner knowledge, adults who ignore the chance or fail to qualify as playmates for the children miss more than they can know, by not learning how a child's mind unfolds, how it adjusts itself to a new world, full of surprises, a world that the child frequently recreates in his own image.

We grown-ups have our motor cars, our radio sets, our bridge cards and backgammon boards to amuse us; the children have their toys. Play, however, is something wholly apart from playthings. It is a spirit, a state of mind, an attitude toward the surrounding world: It does not exist in tangible things but in the imagination. Evidently it is something which grown-ups have lost and may find again only by playing with children on the latter's own terms.

It was so long ago, though, that we grown-ups put away childish things. What do we remember about the child's world of trees, and birds, and stars? How, then, can we suddenly think as a little child; how make ourselves agreeable playfellows and not interloping hindrances to be gotten rid of as soon as possible?

It's up to us to find the clue in the memories of our own childhood. One thing is sure, all our business and professional knowledge, all our skill at golf or contract, will avail us little.

"Learning to be interesting to your child requires a great deal more than the ability to appraise a rare postage stamp or a piece of glass," says Mr. Calkins. "While you are working out what to do, Grown-ups, here are a few 'must not's': You must not stoop to conquer, you must not pretend, you must not domineer, you must not laugh at, but with, the youngster."

"People bring lots of time and patience to bear in cultivating the friendship of dog, bird, or horse. Try it on a child," says Mr. Calkins. "It is an exhilarating experience, with more variety than gardening, woodwork, collecting, or travel."

New Theory Put Forth to Explain Bird Flight

Flight of birds as a kind of rocket action, like that imagined for stratosphere rockets or for the still more fantastic vehicles conceived as traveling some day to other planets or to the stars, is a new idea proposed in France by Dr. E. Batault, life-long student of bird behavior.

A bird's muscles are larger and stronger in proportion than the muscles of animals which do not fly, but Doctor Batault says there is no proof that this difference is great enough to justify the conventional flight theories. Gliding flight is easy to explain, on the same basis of taking advantage of air currents as is used by human aviators, but this does not account for abilities of birds to do many things inexplicable by gliding; for example, to rise in still air.

Doctor Batault's new theory is that the feathers of a bird's moving wing create a continual stream of air backward along the wing surface, like the exhaust gases of an airplane engine or the gaseous discharge of a rocket. The forward reaction created by this he believes to be the force that drives the bird ahead. Calculations of the muscular force necessary require forces much smaller than those needed by the conventional theories and more in line with what a bird's muscles actually produce.

A Doctor Knows!

And doctors use a liquid laxative

There's a very good reason why doctors and hospitals have always used liquid laxatives! You'd use a liquid, too, if you knew how much better it makes you feel.

A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Just ask your own doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

People who have experienced this comfort, never return to any form of help that can't be regulated! The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit—even in children. Its action is gentle, but sure. It will relieve a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset. It's the ideal family laxative because it's a family doctor's prescription, and perfectly safe and effective for family use.

If you are seeking something that will relieve your occasional upset safely and comfortably, try Syrup Pepsin. Give regulated doses until Nature restores regularity.

Consolation
The journey through life goes through many dark tunnels, and the darker and longer they are the more we appreciate the glory of sunshine afterward and the grandness of the view.—A Woman's Confessional.

What Do You Think?
Do your Local merchants deserve your support? How do you feel about this most vital question? The grocer, butcher, hardware, druggist and general store in your immediate community; would you miss them if they all closed their doors tomorrow? I think you would.
You may save a few cents in some instances, by giving your daily business to the large syndicates of retail trade. But are you really. Sure, they will reduce the price on well known merchandise, but for every such article they have ten others pulling on your purse strings to take away from you the saving you made on your original purchase.
They know the weakness of human nature for the glittering tinsel of attractive merchandise. Bear this in mind in your own case and prove it to your self. If this is true, then these large syndicates of retail trade build their success upon the weakness of human nature. They pick out your weak and vulnerable spots and plunge the sword in to the hilt.
Who are the controlling figures of these large syndicates of retail trade? Use your own judgment. Are they in business with the best interests of their patrons at heart? They are not. They are there to get your last dime if they can get it.
How about your local independent merchant? He is there living among you, is one of you. His children go to school with your children. His wife visits with your wife and family. He is very closely interwoven with your social and everyday life.
In his business dealings with you, how is it possible to give you anything but sincere and honest service with your best interests at heart? If he did not, he would not last very long. His business is built on the solid foundation of human consideration and will endure.
Is it worth your while to patronize your local community merchants for your everyday needs? What do you think?

ORLAND PARK
The Orland Fire Department has reason to feel rather proud. Their fire truck which cost $4500 has been fully paid for, the last payment being made at the last village board meeting. In addition to paying the fire truck indebtedness, the fire department has a neat surplus in the treasury so that they can buy things for cash if an emergency arises.
The fire department has the first fire truck bought over forty years ago when the first fire department was created. The first truck was a hand drawn outfit and consists of a double cylinder pump. There being no water mains in those days the water supply was obtained from cisterns and dug wells.
Adam Gundermann was the first fire chief.
The present motor driven fire truck is some contrast to the old hand drawn truck which in its day was considered the real thing in fire fighting apparatus.
Francis Glahn, Sr., has been on the sick list the past few weeks.
Henry Munch is ill.
Tuesday representatives from the sheriff's office were in town looking for slot machines, but failed to find any.
The Public Service Company are extending their electric light from Homer on 159th street up to the Lester Sayers place.
The Christ Lutheran church held a "Sauer Kraut Supper" Thursday night which was well attended.
Spring politics are beginning to stir. A meeting was held Tuesday night in the Creer hall at which a ticket composed of all the members of the present village board, was formed.
The Orland Park Legion Post met Tuesday night. In spite of the cold night there was a good attendance. Vice-Commander Prinderville of the Fourth District was present and addressed the Post.
Mrs. Adolph Zerbs entertained the bunco club last Wednesday.
Due to illness of several members of the Orland R. N. A. Camp the installation of the camp officers to have been held last Thursday had to be postponed to next Thursday evening.
The Guild of the M. E. church is meet in the Creer hall next Thursday afternoon.

Honor Washington's Alone
James Monroe received all but one of the electoral votes in 1820. An elector from New Hampshire voted for John Quincy Adams in order that no President other than George Washington should have the honor of receiving a unanimous vote.
